Briefing

The UK Government Legislative Programme

The New Government's Legislative Programme

The Queen's Speech on 21 June 2017 set out details of the UK Government's plans for new laws to be introduced in this session of Parliament. This includes the introduction of 26 Bills (proposed laws), and unusually, covers the next two years so there will not be another Queen's Speech next year. The Government has explained that this is because the parliament will spend much of the next two years scrutinising legislation that sets out the details of Britain's exit from the European Union ("Brexit").

Reserved and Devolved issues

Not everything that the UK Parliament does is directly relevant in Scotland. The UK Parliament in Westminster has powers over Reserved matters such as foreign affairs, employment and national security. Laws about these subjects apply throughout the whole of the UK.

The Scottish Parliament has full power over Devolved matters. These include education, the NHS, the police, justice, local government and tourism. The UK Parliament can only pass laws that affect devolved matters in Scotland if the Scottish Parliament gives permission by means of a Legislative Consent or "Sewel" Motion.

Two of the Bills announced in the Queen's Speech deal with devolved matters, and will therefore need Scottish Parliament consent in order to apply in Scotland. These are the Repeal Bill and the Financial Guidance and Claims Bill. It is possible that some other Bills may also need Scottish Parliament consent once more details are known, especially as many of the law-making powers currently exercised by the European Union (EU) related to matters that are Devolved to the Scottish Parliament.
